from a position alongside the large grain [REDACTED] 1955, three recently-built merchant ships GRT, so-called three island vessels, were berthed at the shipyard. One of the ships seemed to be almost completed, while the two other ships were getting their superstructures installed. The major part of the building slips of the yard was blocked from view by a large floating dock. Only one building slip, on which a new ship of similar type was under construction, was observed. The floating dock was marked No 3. It had a lifting capacity of between 6,000 and 7,000 tons. [REDACTED] all the merchant ships were destined for the USSR.

On 24 February 1955, three recently-built merchant ships of between 3,500 and 4,000 GRT, so-called "island vessels", were berthed at the shipyard. One of the ships seemed to be almost completed, while the two other ships were getting their superstructures installed. The major part of the building slips of the yard was blocked from view by a large floating dock. Only one building slip, on which a new ship of similar type was under construction, was observed. The floating dock was marked No 3. It had a lifting capacity of between 6,000 and 7,000 tons. [redacted] all the merchant ships were destined for the USSR.
